FOREWORD

Battle Hymn of the Republic

BY JULIA WARD HOWE

Mine eyes have seen the glory
Of the coming of the Lord;
He is trampling out the vintage
Where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loosed the fateful lightning
Of his terrible swift sword;
His truth is marching on.

I have seen Him in the watch-fires
Of a hundred circling camps;
They have builded Him an altar
In the evening dews and damps;
I can read His righteous sentence
By the dim and flaring lamps;
His day is marching on.

He has sounded forth the trumpet
That shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men
Before His judgment-seat;
Oh, be swift, my soul, to answer Him;
Be jubilant, my feet!
Our God is marching on.

In the beauty of the lilies
Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom
That transfigures you and me;
As He died to make men holy,
Let us die to make men free,
While God is marching on.

ON April 6, 1917, the United States came to a full realization that the World War was our war and that we must give every possible human and material support. The call soon came for four million men from eighteen to thirty-five years of age to serve in the overseas fighting forces of the Nation. Many more were needed in the Navy and in other branches of military service. Six hundred and ninety Armco men answered the Nation's call and served faithfully and efficiently in every branch of the service and in almost every part of the world.

This book has been published in order that a full and accurate record might be made of the patriotic service of Armco men in this, the greatest of all human tragedies, and that due recognition and appreciation might be given to those who stood ready to make the supreme sacrifice—the giving of life itself—that those who were not so called to serve and all those who might come after them could continue to enjoy that degree of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness that we, as a nation, believe should be guaranteed to human life.

The name and national service record of each individual who could be considered an Armco man under the definition of qualification established at the time has been sought, and all those secured are herein recorded. It is earnestly hoped that no eligible man or record has been overlooked. Of the six hundred and ninety who accepted service, fourteen made the supreme sacrifice and they are given first place in this record.

It has been our privilege and good fortune to welcome the return of five hundred and twenty-nine men to Armco service. They will undoubtedly prove to be a nucleus of power for future Armco accomplishment and for help in every time of need.

Much human development comes through the making of sacrifices for the good of others. All those who served the nation in this World War and who stood ready to make any needed sacrifice must of necessity be better men because of that experience.

The aftermath of the war finds much to be accomplished in the interest of human progress. Those of us who served abroad and those who served at home in any and every capacity must now stand together in an earnest effort to assist in the solving of the many complex reconstruction problems of the times and in the preservation of all the fundamental principles of our Republic so that we may not lose that priceless heritage of individual liberty for which ten million lives were sacrificed.

To Armco men who entered national service in the great World War and to whom we shall look for continued support of every local, state, and national issue in the real interest of all the people, this book is dedicated.

ARMCO MEN IN WORLD WAR

EVENTS leading up to and during the great World War have already become history.

On July 28, 1914, Austria declared war on Serbia. Four days later Germany declared war on Russia, who, she claimed, was mobilizing troops to help her blood brothers, the Serbs. On August 2 Germany issued an ultimatum to Belgium and, to the everlasting glory of this little nation, she refused the demand of the Imperial German Government that its troops be permitted to cross her territory to attack France. The next day Germany declared war on France, and almost daily one country declared war on another until nearly the whole world was engaged.

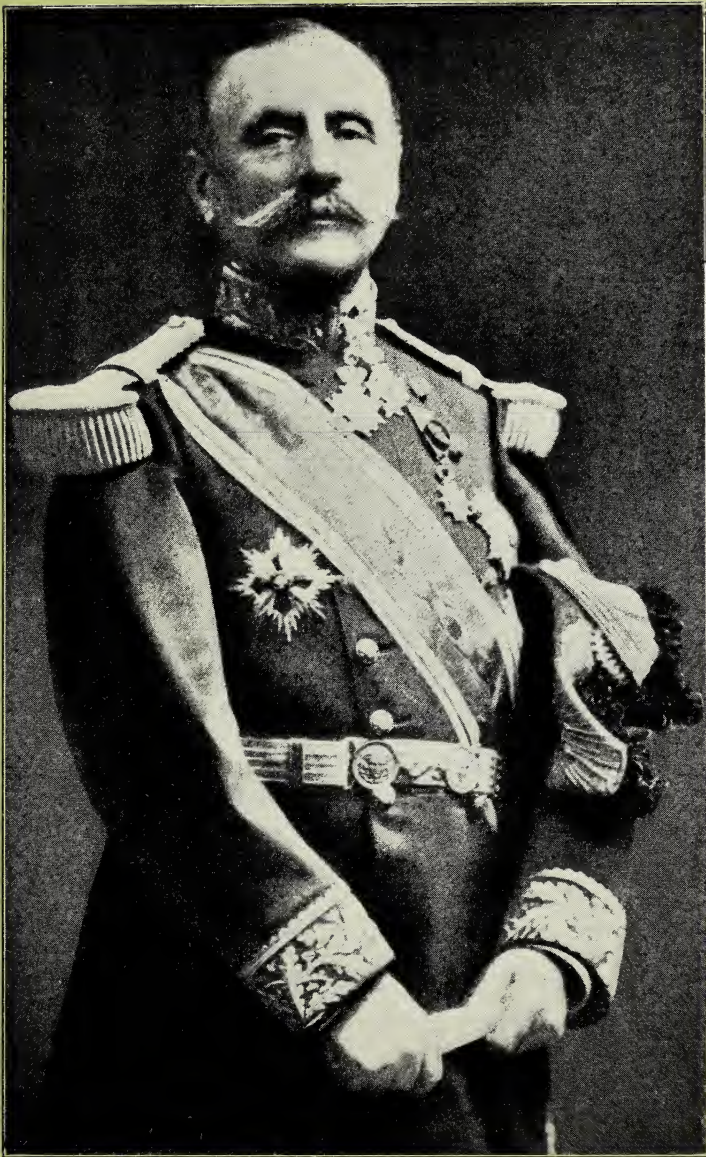

German armies overran Belgium and a large part of France. They were checked at the Marne and the tide of war flowed back and forth. The theater of military activities grew larger, taking in Russia, Serbia, Roumania, Turkey. Battles were fought on the sea. A German fleet sunk a British fleet off the Falkland Islands. Then came the sinking of the Lusitania and the United States was involved. This great passenger ship, carrying 1,951 passengers and crew, was torpedoed off the coast of England by the German U-boat U-20 on May 7, 1915, and 1,198 lives were lost. Many of these were American citizens, among whom were women and children. This brutal deed aroused the whole American people and a cry went up for action. The President asked the people to be calm, to be neutral in thought as well as in deed and to patiently wait.

Early in February, 1915, the kaiser had announced where he would allow ships of his enemies and of neutrals to pass without being attacked by German submarines. This announcement had met with a protest from President Wilson. His first note declared that he would hold the German Government to account if one American ship was sunk or one life taken. Many thought that the time for action had arrived; they felt sure that the United States would have to take a part, and the sooner the better. Many notes passed between the two governments. The spring of 1916 arrived. A submarine attack was made on the Sussex without warning and another American was killed. Germany then promised to modify its attitude but on January 31, 1917, with its customary bad faith it declared that all ships attempting to approach the English or Irish coast or any port in the Mediterranean would be sunk without warning.

Diplomatic relations were at once broken off with Germany and on April 6, 1917, war on Germany was declared by the United States. A selective service law was almost immediately voted by Congress and within a few weeks the names of over ten million men were enrolled. Two and a half years had elapsed since the great war started. Russia had gone to pieces. France and England were weary. The coming in of the United States brought cheer to the hearts of the Allies; a feeling of moral comfort and courage began to pervade the atmosphere. Although the United States at the declaration of war had a small standing army, and time and distance seemed to be two serious obstacles, General Pershing with the first contingent of the expeditionary forces arrived in Paris in June, 1917. By July, 1918, there were over one million American soldiers in France.

It will always be a source of pride to Americans that their soldiers were present in sufficient force at the second battle of the Marne to contribute materially to the magnificent result. If we had not had such a large number of soldiers on the spot, and if they had not been landing in France at the rate of three hundred thousand a month, it is extremely unlikely that Marshal Foch would have made his brilliant counter attack. On July 18 he could afford to throw his splendid French reserves into the battle for two reasons: because, with the rapidly augmenting American armies, he could see plenty of material ahead to supply any losses he might sustain, and because, having tried out these American soldiers, he had learned that in courage they were the equal of any troops which were then in the field.

FERDINAND FOCH—Marshal of France

Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Forces. Shortly after he was made supreme commander he organized the forces at hand for victory, which was realized by the Armistice, November 11, 1918.

The first troops to arrive were received with tremendous ovations. Quoting a booklet to homeward-bound American soldiers from the French Government:

"There were crowds in the streets and about the stations to acclaim the American soldiers. The cheers went up like a cry of relief, and when the French saw the smile which answered them—the smile of youth, happy and glad to lend a hand, to lay down as many lives as need be—then the welcome became more personal, a note of intuitive sympathy sounded in the greeting. From sympathy the feeling grew to one of respect on the day when General Pershing, standing over the grave of the French general who, in 1776, had helped the United States to win her freedom, echoed the lasting gratitude of the American people and pledged the future in these few words,

" 'Lafayette, we are here.' "

But before this the United States had furnished much material aid and the sympathy of America had been revealed by a vanguard of volunteers, Red Cross workers, members of the Lafayette Escadrille, ambulance units, and contributors of money for hospitals and other war activities. Long before we entered the war Armco men had gone to Canada and joined the Canadian army, and several more had left for the Serbian army. They could not wait. They heard the call and had to go. On August 7, 1917, the Armco Ambulance Corps sailed from New York on the French Line Steamer La Tourraine, to render what aid it could to the hard-pressed French. This organization was sponsored by the Armco Association, which raised the Armco War Fund jointly to maintain this corps in France and to give assistance to any Armco man injured in the service. Because it was generally known that France was under a very great strain and needed immediate help, and because everyone appreciated that it would be some time before men could be trained for the army and sent to France, the suggestion was made that the quickest way to help would be to send a complete ambulance unit. A call was made for volunteers and men responded from every department of our organization, both in Middletown and in Zanesville. Fifteen men were accepted for this service.

They arrived in Bordeaux, France, August 19th, and signed up with the Norton-Harjes Volunteer Ambulance Service with the French army. Later they were mustered into the United States Army Ambulance Service. They were at Verdun, Aisne, Chemin des Dames, Marne, and Champagne, attached to noted French divisions. One of them was the Blue Devils of France, another the famous second Morroccaine Division. This organization received six citations, was decorated with the Croix de Guerre, and permitted to wear the Fourragere of colors of ribbon of Medaille Militaire. Only one of the members was wounded, and several were personally awarded the Croix de Guerre. They returned to Middletown May 3, 1919, and received a splendid ovation from the people of the city.

The Armco Ambulance Corps was the only unit that left or returned to Middletown as a unit and it is therefore impossible to follow the several hundred soldiers, sailors, and marines who left the different plants of the American Rolling Mill Company. The records show that Armco men were at Cantigny, Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Wood, Saint Mihiel, the second Battle of the Marne, the Meuse-Argonne offensive, at Piave River in Italy; that they served on battleship, cruiser, submarine, and transport; that they helped on land, in the air, and on the sea to win the great victory of civilization against autocracy.

From the North Sea to the bend in the line about Soissons Germany concentrated for her final great effort. She had brought up eighty-five fresh divisions and launched a formidable attack. By March 25th German troops were within one hundred miles of Paris. The situation had become exceedingly serious. On March 28th, two days after Foch had been made Generalissimo in supreme command of all the forces on the western front, General Pershing made to him the following declaration:

"I have come to tell you that the American people would consider it a great honor for our troops to be engaged in the present battle. I ask you this in their name and in my own. Infantry, artillery, airplanes, all that we have is yours. Use it as you wish. More will come in numbers equal to requirement. I have come particularly to tell you that the American people will be proud to take part in the greatest and finest battle in history."

The first distinctively American action was at Cantigny. Here on a front 2,000 yards wide American troops of the First Division pushed forward in less than a quarter of an hour to a depth of 1,800 feet. They captured 300 prisoners, seized the village of Cantigny and all other objectives, and held them against severe counter attacks.

This combat, as compared to the activities of the French and British, on a front extending from Verdun to the sea, was of minor importance. However, the news of the brilliant dash with which it had been executed spread like wildfire. It was a revelation of what no one had dared to hope; the fighting spirit of the Americans could not be surpassed. This was on May 28th. Cantigny was but a test of our caliber, of our fitness. The practical application of that caliber and fitness was to come later. In the latter days of May the Germans launched a terrific attack against the French lines along the Chemin des Dames. Outnumbered three to one, the French line was overwhelmed along the entire front from Soissons to Craonne. However, the flanks held and the center only retreated. It finally reached Chateau-Thierry. If the enemy were not stopped here they would, by an enveloping movement, have been able to take Paris. It was here on June 1st that American troops stopped the finest shock troops of Germany. Ever will the name Chateau-Thierry bring a glow of pride and glory to the American heart. The French order of the day, referring to this action, reads:

"The courage of the Americans was beyond all praise. The Colonials themselves, though accustomed to acts of heroism, were struck by the wonderful morale of their Allies. The episode of Chateau-Thierry will remain as one of the brilliant pages of war."

On June 6th the Marines led a charge against the best German Guard Divisions, which by midnight ended in the capture of the village and railroad station of Bouresches. The next objective was Belleau-Wood, a point of vital importance. In the attack the conduct of the Fourth Brigade of the Second Division was so brilliant that the general commanding the Sixth French Army decided it should henceforth be called "Marine Brigade Wood." The Third Brigade of Marines was cited as having given a superb example of "dash, abnegation, and sacrifice."

On July 15th the Germans launched another assault on a large scale. It was to be their last. Within forty-eight hours the Allies had broken this offensive. The six American Divisions thrown along the Marne did their share in checking the enemy's advance. On July 18th, in a thrust toward Soissons, the place of honor was given to the First and Second American Divisions, in the company with French troops chosen for their prestige on the battlefield. Space does not permit a detailed account of the fighting of our men in the battles that followed this great attack. By the first days of August the Marne Salient had been completely wiped out. The behavior of the American soldiers brought forth from General Mangin, the French general who had directed the offensive, a generous tribute. He said:

"Your indomitable tenacity stopped the counter attack. I am grateful for the blood you have so generously shed on the soil of my country. I am proud of having commanded you during such splendid days."

On September 12th the first army, which on August 10th had been organized under the personal command of General Pershing, wiped out the Saint-Mihiel salient. One short day sufficed to decide the fate of a position which had been held by the enemy since the early days of the war and which it had taken months to fortify. The famous Saint-Mihiel salient was no more. The inhabitants of many villages were released; sixteen thousand prisoners were taken, as well as four hundred and thirty-four guns and large quantities of war material.

Hardly had this task been completed when real work began—the campaign through the Argonne forest. Here for six weeks under the most intense fire the Germans were pushed back. Their line cracked, then broke, and the American flags flew side by side with the tri-color of France over the outskirts of Sedan.

ALBERT, KING OF THE BELGIANS

Commander-in-Chief of the Belgian Field Forces.

Out of the nine divisions which took part in this brilliant attack only three were in possession of their organic artillery or had ever taken part in active war, and five divisions came in contact with their artillery for the first time on the battlefield. Two divisions had spent about sixty days in calm sectors; one had been ten, another sixteen days in the trenches; two had never been under fire. They were provided with only three quarters the regulation number of horses and wagons, and the natural difficulties which they had to face seemed insurmountable. Yet in spite of roads heavy with mud, of deep ravines, thick woods, and steep hills, the Americans pushed steadily on. At no time superior in numbers to the enemy, during the long struggle they always had the upper hand. On November 11, 1918, an armistice was signed, the enemy had capitulated; the war was won.

Briefly this is the story of our soldiers' and marines' part in the major military activities. Many Armco men served with the British in Belgium and France, and with the Italian troops who repulsed the enemy at Tagliamento and Piave Rivers.

The record of the Navy, too, is a thing to be proud of. Although our ships did not participate in any big naval battles like the one off Dogger Banks, it contributed largely toward the victory. The American sailor served in the European waters from the Mediterranean Sea to the White Sea. He did creditable work at Corfu, Gibraltar, along the French Bay of Biscay ports, at the English Channel ports, on the Irish coast, in the North Sea, at Murmansk and Archangle.

As was the case in the army, it was necessary to increase greatly the number of men in the service. On the day that war was declared the enlistment and enrollment of the navy numbered 65,777 men. On the day that Germany signed the armistice it had increased to 497,030 men and women. On the day war was declared one hundred and ninety-seven ships were in commission. To-day there are two thousand. In addition to furnishing all these ships with trained officers and men, the navy undertook to supply the crews and officers of the growing merchant marines.

War was declared on April 6, 1917. On the 4th of May a division of destroyers was in the European waters. By January

GENERAL ARMANDO DIAZ

Commander-in-Chief of the Italian Forces in the World War.

1, 1918, there were one hundred and thirteen United States naval ships across, and in October, 1918, the total had reached three hundred and thirty-eight ships of all classes, and there were more officers and enlisted men serving in Europe than there were in the whole navy when the United States entered the war. During July and August, 1918, 3,444,012 tons of shipping were escorted to and from Europe by American escort vessels. During the same period 259,604 American troops were escorted to France by United States escort vessels without the loss of a single man through enemy action and destroyers based on British ports supplied 75% of the escort for 318 ships, totalling 2,752,908 tons, and, including the escort vessels, carrying 137,283 United States troops.

The history of convoy operations in which our naval forces have taken part, due to which we have been able to successfully transport such a large number of our military forces abroad, will stand as a monument to both the army and navy as the greatest and most difficult troop transporting effort which has ever been conducted across seas.

Our destroyers and patrol vessels, in addition to convoy duty, waged an unceasing offensive warfare against the submarines. Only three fighting ships were lost as a result of enemy action. The most serious loss of life due to enemy activity was the loss of the coast guard cutter Tampa, with all on board, in Bristol Channel, England, on the night of September 26, 1918. It is believed she was sunk by a torpedo from an enemy submarine but the exact manner in which the vessel met its fate may never be known.

One of the outstanding anti-submarine offensive projects of the year was the mine barrage in the North Sea, which practically closed it to submarines.

Probably the most disappointed of all men who left Armco for the service are those that did not get overseas. Some who were not considered fit for duty relieved others for duty at the front. Many were just about to go when the armistice was signed. All of them in the numerous training camps to which they were assigned worked as they had never worked before in preparation for the day when they would be face to face with the Hun. After the armistice was signed all incentive to train was gone and the days grew longer till the welcome discharge came.

Looking backward over the achievements that marked the progress of the greatest war in history, Armco has reason for just pride in its record. Nearly seven hundred Armco men went into the service to do their part to keep aloft the flag of liberty. And as they marched away those at home redoubled their efforts in production to send forth a steady stream of material for use in munition mines and airplanes.

Every call for assistance on the part of the Government in Liberty Loans, Red Cross and United War Work drives, found the Armco organization ready at the first call. No appeal was allowed to go unanswered.

Fourteen gold stars on the service flag of Armco tell of the heroism of the fourteen brave, stalwart Armco men who gave their lives for their country, and it is to them this book is dedicated. No sacrifice can compare to theirs. They gave their all that peace and happiness might reign again in the world.

“We Shall Remember Them”

THEY sleep beneath no immemorial yews;
Their resting place no temple arches hem;
No blazoned shaft nor graven tablet woos
Men's praise—and yet we shall remember them.

The unforgetting clouds shall drop their tears;
The winds in ceaseless lamentation wail,
For God's white Knights are lying on their biers,
Who pledged their service to restore the Grail.

They gave their lives to make the whole world free;
They recked not to what flag they were assigned;
The Starry Banner, Cross, or Fleur-de-lis—
Their sacrifice was made for all mankind.

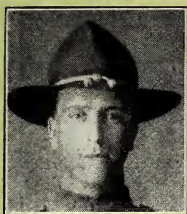

For them the task is done, the strife is stilled;
No more shall care disturb, nor zeal condemn;
And when the larger good has been fulfilled,
In coming years we shall remember them.

How can the world their deeds forget? In France
White crosses everywhere lift pallid hands,
Like silent sentinels with sword and lance,
To keep their memory safe for other lands.

What need have they for holy sepulture?
Within the hearts of men is hallowed ground—
A sanctuary where they rest secure,
And with Love's immortality are crowned.

And far-off voices of the future sing,
“They shall remain in memory's diadem”;
The winds of promise still are whispering—
Through storied years, “We shall remember them.”

THEY LIE IN FRANCE WHERE LILIES BLOOM

They lie in France
Where lilies bloom;
Those flowers pale
That guard each tomb
Are saintly souls
That smiling stand
Close by them in
That martyred land,

And mutely there the long night shadows creep
From quiet hills to mourn for them who sleep,
While o'er them through the dusk go silently
The grieving clouds that slowly drift to sea,
And lately round them moaned the Winter wind
Whose voice, lamenting, sounds so coldly kind,
Yet in their faith those waiting hearts abide
The time when turns forever that false tide.

In France they lie
Where lilies bloom,
Those flowers fair
For them made room.
Not vainly placed
The crosses stand
Within that brave
And stricken land;
Their honor lives,
Their love endures,
Their noble death
The right assures,

For they shall have their hearts' desire
They who, unflinching, braved the fire,
Across the fields their eyes at last shall see
Through clouds and mist the hosts of victory.
